Introduction

Last year, when I finished the 2005 Statistical Abstract, I was sure there would not be another. There were several reasons for that, the single most important being the fact that the WTA was abolishing the “quality points” it awarded players for wins over strong opponents, showing yet again that the WTA neither cared about the integrity of their rankings nor had the understanding to be allowed to fiddle with them; it remains my opinion that marketing people who try to mess with mathematics should be permanently barred from management jobs — or at least made to repeat fourth grade math until they learn how to do it.

The irony is, despite what they did to the ranking system in 2006, it hardly mattered; they came up with just about the same Top Ten they would have had under a system capable of actually ranking players. Sometimes it’s better to be lucky than smart.

But the result of their ranking bastardization is that this year I did not keep some of the statistics I kept in 2005, such as bagel and injury numbers. But I started keeping a rather more thorough database of WTA results. At the end of the year, I decided to go ahead and use that database to produce a Statistical Abstract.

If you’ve seen past Statistical Abstracts, you will probably find this one very different, since much of it was recreated from scratch. I’ve tried to make the result clearer — there are rather more graphs than in past editions. There is a new section, “Player Results Characterized” on page 95. I find this a very interesting part, because I’ve tried to bring together a large proportion of the statistics that best describe a player.

I sometimes am asked what I think the rankings “should” be. Of course, that’s what the Alternate Rankings are for. I think the best of these are

- “Declining Divisor with Double Quality Points” on page 123
- “Adjusted Strength per Tournament Ranking” on page 127
- “Idealized Won/Lost” on page 129

On this basis, I would say that the “proper” Top Ten would look something like this:

Singles	Doubles
1. Hénin-Hardenne	1T. Raymond
2. Sharapova	1T. Stosur
3. Mauresmo	3. Zheng
4. Clijsters	4. Srebotnik
5. Kuznetsova	5. Yan
6. Hingis	6. Black
7. Petrova	7. Stubbs
8. Dementieva	8. Safina
9. Vaidisova	9. Ruano Pascual
10. Safina	10. Peschke

Observe that Dinara Safina is the only player to be Top Ten in both these lists — though that’s mostly because she still plays both. Odds are that Hingis and Petrova and Kuznetsova, at the very least, could be Top Ten in both if they played the right schedules.

One curiosity this year is that the “Quality Points per Tournament” on page 124 don’t give much in the way of bold predictions. The most promising youngster is surely Agnieszka Radwanska, but you probably knew that. Paola Suárez may still have a comeback in her, too. On the other hand, Patty Schnyder’s chances of staying Top Ten don’t look great — she always has a quality ratio below her ranking, but this year is ridiculous. She is the top player who probably has benefited most from the lack of quality points.

I should add that most of the work on this Statistical Abstract was done before Lindsay Davenport retired, and I haven’t gone over it to check if there are references rendered irrelevant by her retirement.

Finally, I would bring to your attention the section “The Busiest Players on the Tour” on page 179. Looking at the leaders and #2 players in WTA matches over the last four years, it turns out that six of the last nine have had disastrous years (by their standards) the next year. Kuznetsova, Bartoli, and maybe Hingis need to watch out. Indeed, if the statistics about “Success During the First and Second Half of the Year” on page 108 are indicative, Hingis may already have started her big letdown.

2006 In Review: The Top Players

The Final Top Thirty

Because we can't cover every tennis pro, we have to devote our attention to relatively few. For obvious reasons, the WTA's Top 30 are the most important of those few. The list below summarizes those players.

In addition to listing the players, this table shows a few things about them. "Best 17 score" and "Number of Tournaments" are from the WTA, used to calculate their rankings. "Point gap from the preceding" shows how many points a player would need to earn to overtake the player above her. So Safina, a mere one points behind #10 Vaidisova, is a very strong #11, but Jankovic, 179 points behind, is a weaker #12. "Began year at" is the player's ranking twelve months earlier — under the old ranking system, note, so that some of the difference in rankings may be due to the change in the system. The final column shows how much each player's ranking has changed in the interim. Note that a negative number in that column indicates an upward move; smaller numbers are better. So (if we exclude Hingis), Li Na, e.g., had the biggest upward move of any player in the Top 30: 36 places!

Top Players Analysed

All the Players in the Top Ten in 2006:

The Complete Top Ten Based on WTA (Best 17) Statistics

The lists below show all players who have ranked in the Top 10 in 2006, with the highest rank achieved. A total of fourteen players spent time in the Top Ten in 2006 — an unusually low number; there were sixteen players spent time in the Top Ten in 2005 and 2004, and fifteen in 2003. The recent low was twelve in 2002, but we have fully in 2001; and sixteen in 2000. We will have to see how this develops, but it seems likely that the Great Rankings Change of 2006 may have a role in this: The change eliminated quality points, and quality points historically have heralded the rise of new players. Eliminating them will likely make the rankings slower to respond to changes in players' results.

Clijsters (1)	Kuznetsova (4)	Schnyder (7)
Davenport (1)	Mauresmo (1)	Sharapova (2)
Dementieva (5)	Petrova (3)	Vaidisova (9)
Hénin-Hardenne (1)	Pierce (5)	V. Williams (10)
Hingis (7)	Safina (10)

The following list shows all the players who have occupied a given position in the Top 10:

1. Clijsters, Davenport, Hénin-Hardenne, Mauresmo
2. Clijsters, Hénin-Hardenne, Mauresmo, Sharapova
3. Clijsters, Davenport, Hénin-Hardenne, Mauresmo, Petrova, Sharapova

9. Dementieva, Hingis, Pierce, Schnyder, Vaidisova
10. Davenport, Kuznetsova, Safina, Schnyder, Vaidisova, V. Williams

Short Summary: The Top Eighty

The following table shows the entire WTA Top Eighty, with brief summary of results. In the table, Final Rank is a player's year-end ranking (based on the November 13, 2006 rankings), Player is of course the player, Score is her Best 17 point total, # of Trn is the number of tournaments she is listed as playing (including Challengers), Best Rank is her highest ranking during the year 2006, Won/Lost is won/lost record (in the notes to this field, Wi=Withdrawal, WO=walkover. So Clijsters, for instance, won 40 matches, lost eleven, received one walkover, and withdrew once). Note that this figure includes only WTA main draws. Many players will have losses in wins and losses in qualifying and/or Challengers. Titles is the list of titles the player won, if any. We list the names (sometimes abbreviated), then the number of titles in parentheses. So #4 Svetlana Kuznetsova's line, e.g., reads Miami, Bali, Beijing (3). This means Kuznetsova won three titles — the three listed. Titles at $50K and higher Challengers are also shown (in green to distinguish them from regular titles).

Full Summary of Tournament Results

The following list shows all tournaments since the end of the 2005 Tour year (November 15, 2005). This includes not only Tour events but also $50K and higher challengers. The tournament summary includes several statistics about the Tournament. First is the date and the name. Also on the first line of the entry are the tournament's strength (Slam, Championships, Tier I, Tier II, $75K Challenger, etc., and the surface on which it is played.

The second line, "Modified TSI" and "Top Four Strength," give statistics about the strength of the event. The Modified TSI is my modification of Geert Calliauw's Tournament Strength Index, (for details of this, see the section "Tournament Strength Based on Modified TSI" on page 37); in this statistic, the higher the number, the stronger the event; the maximum is 475. The next statistic, Top Four Strength, is also a strength measure(explained in the section "Tournament Strength Based on Top Four Players" on page 36); it is based on the rankings of the top four players in the field. For this statistic, lower is better; a tournament with a strength of 13 is at maximum strength under this measure.

The third line of any entry, "Top players," lists the four top players in the field, with their ranking and the round in which they lost. Note that this is not the top four seeds; it the four highest-ranked players whatever their seeding.

The fourth and fifth lines list the winner, finalist, and semifinalists, with their rankings. The final line lists the doubles winner and finalists.

Title Defences

Title defences seem to have been declining in recent years. In 2003, we had no fewer than twelve title defences. There were nine in 2004, and six in 2005 (two by Mauresmo, and one each by Davenport, Medina Garrigues, Medina Garrigues, and Zvonareva). This year, the statistics are identical: Six defences, with five different players producing a title defence. The one player to defend multiple events was, somewhat improbably given her small number of titles, Kim Clijsters.

Tournament	Defender
Antwerp	Mauresmo
Roland Garros	Hénin-Hardenne
Palermo	Medina Garrigues
Stanford	Clijsters
Budapest	Smashnova
Hasselt	Clijsters

Tournament Strengths

There is, unfortunately for statisticians and players alike, no accepted and universal measure for determining tournament strength. It's unfortunate for players because they don't get rewarded based on their actual accomplishments. It's unfortunate for statisticians because it makes it hard to correlate tournament strength with anything else.

We will take a couple of stabs at it, though. We have two methods, both of which are used in the table of tournament results above. The first is the "Top Four Strength," or, to be more explicit, the "Tournament Strength Based on Top Four Players." This is quite simple: We simply take the (WTA) rankings of the top four players (that's based on actual rankings, not seeding, we note). We then add them up, counting the top two players twice. So the Australian Open, which featured the world's #1, #2, #3, and #4 players, had a strength of $1+1+2+2+3+4$, or 13. Sydney, which featured the #2, #3, #6, and #7, had a strength of $2+2+3+3+6+7$, or 23. The strongest possible tournament, in this ranking, is one with a strength of 13. There is no absolute upper bound, since theoretically a $10K event could have no ranked players at all, but in practice the maximum for a Tour event is around 300 and the maximum for a $50K or higher Challenger really ought to be in the 1000 range; a stronger Challenger will be above 500.

The second method, the Modified TSI, is better for ranking the top events, but is not intended to measure low-tier events. The original TSI (Tournament Strength Index) was proposed by Geert Calliauw. His Tournament Strength Index calculates the total quality points available for the top eight seeds, and calculates this as a fraction of the possible quality points if all of the Top Eight played. My modified version uses the same calculation, but counts only Top 25 players. (This is a change from 2002, when only Top Ten players counted; the purpose is to allow us to assess the sorts of events with only a handful of top players.) Recall that the #1 player is worth 100 quality points, #2 is worth 75, #3 66, #4 55, #5 50, and players #6-#10 are worth 43. Players below #10 are counted at a discounted rate: 15 points for those ranked #11-#16, 10 for those ranked #17-#25. The strongest possible tournament has a modified TSI of 475, so we can express this as a percentage: A tournament with a Modified TSI of 475 will be at 100% of full strength, one with a modified TSI of 427 would be at 90% strength, etc. The tables on the next two pages list the tournaments in order based on their strength. The first list, "Tournament strength based on Top Four Players," includes all WTA events plus as many Challengers as fit (Note: I have calculated Top Four rankings for all $50K and higher events, but not all $25K events; it is unlikely, though, that any of the $25K events are stronger than the events listed here; Surbiton's $25K event is always strong, but few other $25K events will have more than one Top 100 player at best). The second table, "Tournament Strength based on Modified TSI, includes primarily WTA events, since only one of the Challengers this year had a Top 25 player (Grönefeld played the Ortisei $75K event).

It's probably not surprising to note that the only tournaments to have the maximum strength of 13 are required events: Australian Open, Miami, Roland Garros, Wimbledon, and the Madrid Championships, with the U. S. Open right behind. It is fascinating to note that Eastbourne, which for many years had been one of the weaker Tier II events, suddenly finds itself the strongest optional event.

The greater ability of the Modified TSI ranking to distinguish strong events is shown at the top of its list: Once again the top six events are the six required events (the Slams, Miami, and Madrid), but Modified TSI drops Wimbledon a bit. We also see some small moves in the events below the required events — e.g. instead of Eastbourne being #7, Moscow takes that spot (Eastbourne falls to #12). But generally the same events show up near the top in both lists. We note that, under Modified TSI, the weakest Tier I/II event (Pan Pacific) is still stronger than the strongest Tier III/IV (Bali), which is as it should be. That's not quite true under the Top Four system, but it's close.

Tournament Strength versus Tournament Points

The above data tell us which tournament are strongest; they do not tell us much about the relationship between tournament strength and points awarded. But we can easily examine this. The following graph compares points awarded with the Modified TSI value of the various tournaments:

It will be evident that this is anything but a linear relationship. On this graph, it's almost a sideways parabola. If we take a correlation coefficient between points awarded and tournament strength¹, it turns out to be almost exactly .8.

The next page shows a similar graph, but this time we'll correlate points awarded against the Top Four Players statistic, incorporating many more tournaments (including a lot of Challengers which, for space reasons, I did not show in the chart of strongest tournaments).

1. The correlation coefficient is a mathematical measure of how related two data sets are. If they correlate exactly, the correlation coefficient is 1.0 (or, possibly, -1.0, if the data set is in the wrong order). If the data are unrelated, the correlation coefficient is 0. My standard way of trying to explain what values mean is as follows: In physics lab, we thumb-fingered physics students still obtained correlations of at least .97 for our experimental data; a real physicist working with proper equipment could expect to get a correlation of .999 or so. In medical experiments, say involving genetics, ratios in the range of .3 to .5 are considered meaningful. My feeling is that the WTA could make the correlation between tournament strength and points awarded be at least .9 — if they wanted to.

Points versus Tournament Strength (Top Four)

I reversed the axes this time, but it is clear that we again have a generally parabolic shape. It's pretty clear that the WTA would get a more accurate rankings system by spreading out the points awarded. (And in fact we have an Alternate Rankings for this, "Tournament Strength-Based Rankings" on page 125.) But accurate rankings are not their primary concern.

If we take a correlation coefficient for this data, we find, astonishingly, a mere .62 correlation between tournament strength under this measure and tournament points. And if we correlate just the same 62 events we correlated under Modified TSI, that falls to .59. That's almost frighteningly bad.

Tough Bills and Cheap Thrills

It's one thing to win a title. It's altogether another to win one against strong opposition. The lists below categorizes the 61 events of 2006 based on what the winner had to do to win the title. (Note: for brevity, titles are listed only once. So a player who won a title without beating a Top Twenty player clearly also won without beating a Top Ten player.)

Won Title Beating At Least Two Top Ten Players (Total of 11):

Australian Open: Mauresmo	Antwerp: Mauresmo	Miami: Kuznetsova

Player Results

The list below shows all the tournaments played by the most significant players of 2006. Any player who concluded 2005 in the Top Thirty (under the old ranking system), ended it in the Top Forty, or played an event while in the Top Thirty, is listed. To explain the data in the table:

Each cell in the table begins by identifying the player by name. It then lists her final ranking (i.e. where she was ranked on the November 12, 2006 rankings), followed by the highest ranking she had during the 2006 season. (Note that, in one or two cases, this is a 2005 ranking, from before the elimination of quality points.)

Then comes the player's actual results, with one line for each tournament she played. The numbers in parentheses list, first, the Tier of the tournament, second, how far the player went, and third, the number of wins achieved. This is followed by a list of top players beaten en route, with the player's rank at the time. For example, the second item in the entry for Sofia Arvidsson reads

Australian Open (Slam, R32/Myskina [14], 2) — Safina (19)

This means that Arvidsson's second tournament of 2006 was the Australian Open. The designation "Slam" means that it was a Grand Slam; if a Roman numeral is used, it refers to the tier of the event (Tier I, II, III, IV, sometimes with a suffix such as "+" or "req" — referring to events bigger than the "standard" Tier I/II/III/IV); the other possibilities are "Slam" for the Grand Slams, "Champ" for the year-end Championships, and a dollar amount, e.g. $50K, for a Challenger. R32/Myskina means that Arvidsson reached the Round of 32 (third round), where she was beaten by Anastasia Myskina, then ranked #12. The 2 indicates that she won two matches prior to that defeat. Players she defeated included Dinara Safina, then ranked #19. (Note: only wins over Top 35 players are listed.) If a tournament is shown in bold, it means the player won the title.

(N.B. Müller also played the $25K Toronto Challenger in November 2005. This was before the end of the 2005 Tour season, but because it was a $25K event, it did not go on the rankings until the November 20 rankings. Thus Müller was shown with 34 events at the end of 2006. But she in fact had played “only” 33 in that time.)

Upsets

The 100 Biggest Upsets of 2006

Want to know who pulled off the biggest upset of 2006? Easy: Stephanie Dubois, who (helped by an injury) beat Kim Clijsters at the Canadian Open. How did I decide that that was the biggest upset? By direct mathematical means: I took rankings ratios. Dubois was #151 at the time, Clijsters #2. So Dubois's ranking was 151:2, or 75.5 times that of Clijsters.

To compile this list, I took every match played by a Top 100 player this year, and took the ratio of her ranking to the player she lost to. This list shows them, in descending order based on that ratio. Note: Where a player is unranked, I have treated her ranking as #999. Observe that that affects, e.g., our #2 upset — even though it's hardly an upset when Martina Hingis beat Klara Koukalova. But Hingis was unranked at the time.

1. Canadian Open 2R: Stephanie Dubois (#151) def. Kim Clijsters (#2). Ratio=75.5
2. Gold Coast 2R: Martina Hingis (unranked) def. Klara Koukalova (#29). Ratio=34.4
3. Pan Pacific SF: Martina Hingis (#117) def. Maria Sharapova (#4). Ratio=29.3

Worst Losses

The above list of upsets is based on ranking ratios. This is a variation on a theme: The lowest-ranked player lost to. I took all players who ended 2006 in the Top 35, or who ended 2005 in the Top 30, and determined their two worst losses based on the opponent's rank. The list of such losses is found on the next page.

Surface Results

This section examines results on different surfaces. We'll look at the players who ended 2005 or 2006 in the Top Thirty (excluding poor Alicia Molik and Kveta Peschke, who simply weren't able to play successfully in 2006), and examine their results on the four surfaces (clay, grass, hardcourt, indoors).

Surface Balance

Percentage of Wins on Each Surface

This section attempts to show how “balanced” players were between surfaces — that is, how close they came to having a “typical” ratio of clay to grass to hardcourt to indoor wins. The table below shows how many wins each player had on each surface, and the percentage of her wins on that surface. For example, Marion Bartoli had 51 total wins, and four on clay, so she had 7.8% of her wins on clay. She had three of her 51 wins on grass, so 5.9% of her wins were grass win.

The final column is the “surface deviation.” The year-end Top Thirty as a whole earned 23.3% of their wins on clay, 10.0% on grass, 50.4% on outdoor hardcourts, and 16.3% indoors. “Deviation” is each player’s root mean square deviation from this “standard” schedule of wins. A player who had an exactly typical schedule would have a deviation of 0; the higher the deviation, the stranger the player’s schedule. Roughly speaking, a deviation under 0.1 indicates a very balanced schedule — but the only players with such schedules were Jankovic and Hingis. A deviation under .15 could be considered balanced; 12 players (including of course Jankovic and Hingis) had such schedules. A schedule with a deviation of .15 to .3 is mildly unbalanced; 13 players had such a schedule. A deviation from .3 to .4 is unbalanced; seven players had such schedules. Four players had extremely unbalanced schedules (deviation greater than .4), but three of these — the Williams Sisters and Lindsay Davenport — were injured for most of the year. The only player with an extremely unbalanced schedule who played the whole year was Anna-Lena Grönefeld.

If we look at deviations by particular surfaces, we note that four players (Davenport, Golovin, Pierce, and Serena Williams) had no clay wins; of them, only Golovin played a clay match, and she shouldn’t have played it. Among those who were reasonably healthy, Sugiyama, Sharapova, and Likhovtseva had the smallest clay percentages. Venus Williams had the highest fraction of her wins on clay, but that again is health; Flavia Pennetta, who was third in the “heaviest clay schedule” also missed a big chunk of the year. Of healthy players, Grönefeld had the highest percent of her wins on clay, followed by Medina Garrigues. (No surprises yet.)

On grass, Davenport, Petrova, Pierce, and Serena Williams had no matches; of those who played, Maria Kirilenko had the most extreme value (no grass wins), followed by Patty Schnyder and Shahar Peer. The players with the heaviest biases toward grass, oddly, were all Russians: Elena Likhovtseva, followed by Anastasia Myskina and Vera Zvonareva.

Turning to hardcourts, we at last have a surface that everyone played on, at least a little. Though Venus Williams had no hardcourt wins and has the strongest anti-hardcourt bias (and who would ever have believed that?). Among players who played full scheduled, Nathalie Déchy had the strongest anti-hard bias, followed by Grönefeld and Pennetta. Davenport and Serena Williams had all their matches on hardcourt, and so are most biased toward hard; of those who were mostly healthy, Ai Sugiyama had the strongest pro-hard bias, followed by Bartoli and Kirilenko.

Indoors, Davenport and Serena had no events; Pennetta and Li Na each played and lost one indoor match. Among healthy players, the strongest bias against indoor events was shown by Medina Garrigues (still no surprises), followed by Sugiyama (now that is surprising), then Dulko. Pierce, whose schedule was affected by injury, had the strongest bias toward indoor events, then Golovin (who also had suffered somewhat from injury), then Petrova (same), then Déchy, then Elena Dementieva.

Percentage of Points on Each Surface

Pretty much the same as the preceding, except that we total players' points instead of their wins. As it turns out, the Top Thirty earned 22.3% of their points on clay, 10.6% on grass, 46.5% on hardcourt, 20.6% indoors.

If we look at deviations in points, following our same criteria, the only player with a very balanced schedule (deviation less than .1) was Martina Hingis. Eight players had balanced schedules (deviation under .15). 19 players had mildly unbalanced schedules (deviation of .15 to .3). Six players had unbalanced schedules (deviation of .3 to .4). Just as with wins, we had four players with extremely unbalanced schedules — and it's the same four: Anna-Lena Grönefeld, plus the injured Williams Sisters and Lindsay Davenport.

Looking at clay, Davenport, Pierce, and Serena Williams did not play, and Golovin had just the one loss; Sharapova, the mostly-healthy player with the lowest fraction of clay points, also missed some clay. That leaves Ai Sugiyama as the player with the lowest fraction of her points on clay, followed by Elena Likhovtseva and Amélie Mauresmo. Most clay-dependent was Venus Williams, who of course missed most of the year; of the mostly-healthy players, Grönefeld biased most toward clay, followed by Flavia Pennetta and Anabel Medina Garrigues (again, this is hardly a surprise).

On grass, Davenport, Petrova, Pierce, and Serena Williams had no matches. Next-least in terms of grass points was Maria Kirilenko, who was winless on grass. Then comes Patty Schnyder and Martina Hingis. The players with the highest grass percentages were Anastasia Myskina and Elena Likhovtseva (who managed the astonishing feat of earning over 30% of their points on grass), with Li Na a distant third.

Venus Williams, with just the one hardcourt match, of course had the lowest fraction of her points on hardcourt, followed by Nathalie Déchy, Grönefeld, and Nadia Petrova. Apart from Davenport and Serena Williams, who played only hardcourts, the players most hardcourt-dependent were Marion Bartoli, Ai Sugiyama, and Ana Ivanovic.

Davenport and Serena Williams had no indoor matches. Li Na, Flavia Pennetta, Gisela Dulko, and Anabel Medina Garrigues were next in the I-hate-indoors stakes (in Li's case, because of injury; Pennetta was hurt too, and Dulko was just plain bad. But Medina Garrigues is another instance of the rule that clay-loving women hate indoors even more than they hate grass). Most indoor-dependent was Mary Pierce, but that again was injury. Of healthy players, Elena Dementieva had the highest fraction of her points indoors, followed by Tatiana Golovin, Nadia Petrova, and Samantha Stosur.

Percent of Points on Each Surface

Player Results Characterized

The next few items attempt to describe just how players accomplished what they accomplished. Did a particular player earn most of her points at Slams? Did she earn most of her points by beating up on weak players? Did she play a particularly strong schedule? The statistics below attempt to answer at least some of those questions.

Fraction of Points Earned at Slams

This statistic takes a player's Best 17 points, and her Slam points, and expresses the former as a percentage of the latter. The higher the percentage of Slam points, obviously, the more dependent on the Slams the player was. For these players overall, almost exactly a third of the points (33.2%) were earned at Slams.

Ratio of Round to Quality Points

This table takes our highlight players, and calculates the ratio of their round points (at all events, not just their best 17) to quality points. The more quality points (i.e. the lower the ratio), the more the players are earning their points “the hard way” (by beating top players). The higher the ratio, the higher the odds that they’re taking advantage of relatively easy draws. So Davenport and Serena Williams, e.g., were facing tough going to earn their points, while Pennetta and Medina Garrigues were, well, not.

For our players as a group, the Round to Quality Ratio was 2.02:1.

37	Medina Garrigues, Anabel	722	214	3.37:1
38	Pennetta, Flavia	695	205	3.39:1

The above is another item we can graph. The graph below shows what percentage of a player's points would be round points, and what percentage from quality, if the WTA still awarded quality points. Players are in alphabetical order, with their rankings following their names. The median percentage is 66% round points, 34% quality points. Anyone with more than about 70% round points it probably playing too many weak events; anyone with more than 40% quality is probably suffering from a bad schedule and will likely do better next yer.

Strength of Schedule (based on nominal tournament tier)

The table below determines how strong a player's schedule was based on the tier of the event. For purposes of the calculation, a Slam or the year-end Championships is treated as a 0, a Tier I is 1, a Tier II is 2, etc.; a Challenger I have treated as "Tier 8." A top player should probably play a schedule somewhere between 1.25 and 1.6; a player with a value of 1.0 or less is simply playing too high on the schedule, and one below about 1.7 is much too weak for a top player. In that context, Bartoli, Li Na, Grönefeld, and Peer need to toughen their schedules; Venus Williams, Hénin-Hardenne, Sharapova, and possibly Mauresmo need to lighten up.

Strength of Schedule (based on actual tournament strength)

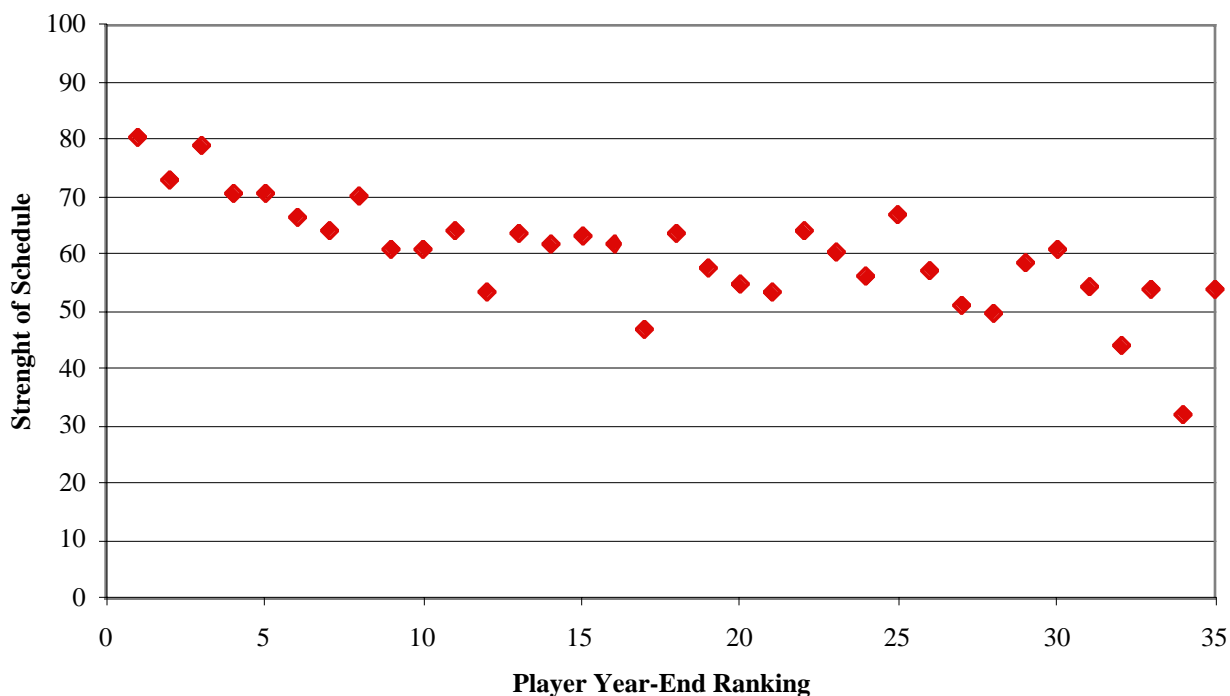

The table below determines a player's strength of schedule by taking the Modified TSI (for which see "Tournament Strength Based on Modified TSI" on page 37) of each of her events, adding them up, and then dividing by the number of events. The higher the average, the tougher the player's schedule.

41	Müller	1063	33	32.2	34

Note that the numbers above do not measure how a player did against her schedule; they just measure what a player signed up for. We note that the total strength divided by total events for all our players combined is 58.8. On that basis, players from Hénin-Hardenne down to about Chakvetadze have schedules significantly tougher than average; players from Jankovic on down were playing relatively soft schedules for a top player. The figure for Martina Müller is almost unbelievably weak — but then, Müller spent a large fraction of the year in Challengers, and in fact it remains to be seen if she can continue to win now that she'll be playing at the WTA level.

It should be noted that a high-ranked player will inherently play a somewhat tougher schedule than a low-ranked, because she herself raises the strength score of the event. It's worth asking just how strong this effect is. The graph below charts strength of schedule against ranking for the final Top 35. The result is striking. It turns out that, once you fall below the Top 35, there is effectively no correlation between schedule strength and ranking. But for the Top 35, the correlation coefficient is .76,

Strength of Schedule versus Ranking

Average Round Reached

The table below shows the typical level of success for each player, as shown by how far she went in the tournament. The table lists the number of titles, finals, semifinals, quarterfinals, earlier losses, and opening-round losses for each player. To take the average, we assign a “0” for an opening round loss, “1” for an early loss (in any round before the quarterfinal), “2” for a quarterfinal, “3” for a semifinal, “4” for a final, and “5” for a title. From that, we calculate the average round reached. This is in the next-to-last column. The final column gives an approximation, in words, of what the number means.

Quality of Wins

The table below looks at the types of wins for our highlight players. Justine Hénin-Hardenne, for instance, had 56 total wins. Ten of these were over players who were Top Five at the time. Four others were over players who were Top Ten but not Top Five. Twelve were over players ranked #11-#20, seven were over players ranked #21-#30, six were over players ranked #31-#50, and 17 were over players ranked below the Top Fifty. The percent of her wins that fall in each category are also shown in this box. The last two columns require some additional explanation; they attempt to measure the quality of each player's wins. The "average win" column calculates the average ranking of the opponents she beat; the lower, of course, the better. The "Median" Category is a calculation of the approximate "middle" opponent the player faced. Again, the lower, the better — it means the player is beating top opponents.

Finally, we can of course graph these wins, to give an idea of just how each player performed.

Quality of Losses

The equivalent of the preceding set of statistics, but for losses rather than wins. I break losses into those to Top Five players, other Top Ten players, other Top Twenty players, other Top Thirty players, other Top Fifty players, other Top 100 players, and non-Top 100 players. Again, the higher the average and median wins, the better.

As we did with wins, we can sort these by quality of average losses. Here, the most interesting results may be the high “toughness” faced by Hingis and Davenport and the surprisingly easy losses for Sharapova.

Let's graph the losses.

Types of Losses

Success During the First and Second Half of the Year

This is mostly a measure of “trends” — of players who did significantly better, or worse, in the first or the second half of the year. There can be a lot of reasons for this, of course — Nadia Petrova probably did better in the first half than in the second because she got hurt; Jelena Jankovic did better in the second half because she finally got her strength back; Anabel Medina Garrigues did better in the first half because there is more clay in the spring; Anna-Lena Grönefeld also prefers clay and she lost her confidence; Martina Hingis ran out of gas (and perhaps suffered from anaemia) in the second half. It is left to the reader to try to figure out the reasons; we’ll just offer the data.

The first half of the year is defined as running from January 1 to the end of Roland Garros on June 12 (note that, in the case of Marion Bartoli, this means we leave off some points from the Challengers she played in late 2005). The second half of the year runs from Birmingham to Madrid. It turns out that this is, indeed, almost exactly half the year in terms of points: The players who ended the year in the Top Thirty earned 21965.75 points in the first half, 21994.75 in the second — a difference of 29 points out of more than 43,000 they collectively earned. That’s less than one part in a thousand! So a player whose ratio of first half to second half points differs significantly from 1:1 is unbalanced for some reason.

The table on the next page attempts to make that clear: It lists the player’s WTA ranking, her name, her first half points, her second half points, and the ratio, first half to second half. So, for example, #1 Justine Hénin-Hardenne earned 2099 points in the first half of the year, 1899 in the second half. Since she earned more points in the first half (due probably to a limited second-half schedule; she doesn’t lie indoor surfaces much), her ratio is 1.11:1 — i.e. she earned 1.11 times as many points in the first half as the second.

Note that we count every point earned in the first or second half, whether they count toward a player’s Best 17 or not. And, of course, the “expected” ratio of first to second half points is 1:1. All ratios are expressed with respect to 1 — that is, 1.11:1, 0.95:1, etc. If the number to the left is larger than 1, then the player had a better first half; if it is less than one, then the player had a better second half. The amount of variation is extreme; as a rough rule of thumb, a player whose ratio falls between 0.6:1 and 1.5:1 can be considered fairly normal. Anything beyond those extremes is clearly unbalanced.

If you prefer to think in terms of percentages instead of ratios, the graph that follows the table expresses its figures in percents rather than as a ratio.

First Half versus Second Half Points

We can, incidentally, sort this data to see who has the most extreme “half preference.” That table is shown below, with the players at the top having the most extreme first half preference; those at the bottom did better in the second half.

Surface Preferences

The section on surfaces (page 74) gave us much detail on players' surface preferences. It did not, however, give us one grand overview. Let's offer a few statistics on that subject. The data here is based on the points on each surface; for this, see the section "Percentage of Points on Each Surface" on page 92.

The table below sorts the players based on their degree of balance, as shown in the table following page 92.

Player Surface Biases

Knowing whether a player is balanced or unbalanced is interesting, but it doesn't tell us her actual surface preferences. The table below does that, showing the surfaces where a player earned an unusually high or low fraction of her points.

In the table below, a player is biased toward a surface if her fraction of points on that surface is at least half again the average for the top players. She is biased heavily toward a surface if her points on that surface are twice the top player average.

A player is biased against a surface if her points on that surface are less than two-thirds the top player average, and is heavily biased against it if her points are less than half the top player average.

Note that a player can have some biases and still be balanced overall. The "bias" shown below takes one surface at a time, whereas deviation measured above is based on all four surfaces simultaneously (meaning that a player who is significantly off-balance on all four surfaces, without a bias on a particular surface, may show more deviation than a player who has one relatively good or bad surface but who is otherwise fairly balanced).

As it turns out, only two players — Schiavone and Srebotnik — have no biases at all.

To try to make it clearer the level of bias for each player, I've put one bias on each line. So the shorter the entry below, the more nearly balanced the player. Players with only one bias are shown in BOLD.

Except for the handful of much-injured players, there are few real surprises here — e.g. Grönefeld likes clay. Hingis dislikes grass, and Schnyder likes it even less. Sharapova hates clay. Petrova likes clay and indoors. It's odd to see Hénin-Hardenne without a bias toward clay, but that's because she's fairly balanced. Myskina's dislike of indoors is the result of her year-end collapse.

Alternate Rankings

To justify this section, we should perhaps start at the very beginning, and ask, “What is a ranking system?”

It’s pretty easy to rank two and only two players. Surely we can agree that, if player A beats player B in most of their meetings, and they never play others, then player A is better, right? Well, that gives us a way of ranking a whole bunch of players: The ideal ranking system is the one in which the rankings of all players most accurately reflects the head-to-head results of each individual pair of players. Or, to put it another way, for all pairs of players A and B, the ranking system is the ordering of players for which, if $A > B$ (that is, if A wins the largest share of her matches against B), then A is ranked ahead of B for the highest number of pairs of players.

An obvious concept, but a very difficult one to calculate. For one thing, these relationships are not transitive. If $A > B$, and $B > C$, it does not necessarily follow that $A > C$ (think Roger Federer, Rafael Nadal, and James Blake to see what this means: Nadal, at least in the past, usually beat Federer, but Blake beat Nadal, and Federer beat Blake). For another, there is no method, except brute force, to test for the best ranking system under these circumstances — and the task is too large for any computer today.

But we can approximate. The WTA ranking system is, in theory, an attempt to calculate this ranking list. Unfortunately, the WTA is run by marketing people, who of course should be denied by law the right to have anything to do with mathematics or science, but of course, being marketing people (and not very good ones at that), they refuse to admit this. So they’ve created a ranking system that has no relationship whatsoever to the ideal ranking system.

There is nothing magic about the current system. The WTA has revised its ranking system many times over the years; it will revise it again in 2007. But two of these changes stand out as the most utterly stupid: The 1997 change from divisor rankings (under which losses counted) to additive rankings (in which losses didn’t count), and the 2006 change which eliminated the “quality points” players earned for wins over top players (meaning that you earned just as many points for a walkover as you did for beating the world’s top player).

We won’t burden you with the reasons why these changes made the WTA rankings less like the real rankings — though there are good theoretical reasons why this is so. We’ll just note that what the WTA can miscalculate, we can recalculate.

Remember that I can no more calculate the ideal rankings than the WTA can. But I’m going to make a few attempts at ranking systems which are more accurate, or which, in some cases, reveal a particular point without necessarily being a proper ranking system in themselves.

The first few systems all rely on the same basic data: Points and number of events. The WTA calculates its rankings based on “round points” — points earned based on going a certain distance in a tournament. We’ll use those, but we’ll also calculate the quality points that the players would have earned if the WTA still had quality points. Then — well, then we’ll fiddle.

The basic numbers we’ll be using are on the next page. We’re looking at only the higher-ranked players — those the WTA had in the Top Thirty at year-end, plus eight others with high potential or who were ranked much higher last year.

2005 Rankings: Best 17 Rankings with Quality Points

For our first measure, let's see what the rankings would have been had the WTA not shifted ranking systems. The table below takes the player's points as calculated by the WTA, subtracts a fourteenth of their Slam points (since the Slams were boosted in value as part of the system change), then adds the quality points. The Top Ten are unchanged by this, amazingly, but notice the upward moves by Daniela Hantuchova and Li Na and the fall of Anna-Lena Grönefeld. There would be other dramatic changes lower down — e.g. Virginia Ruano Pascual had a lot of quality points and was penalized by the rankings shift — but our main concern is with the Top Thirty.

1996 Ranking System: The Divisor

The ranking system above had results similar to the WTA's. Not so the 1996 ranking system! The divisor takes a player's total points in all events (including quality points), then divides by the number of events — or by 14, whichever is larger. (Players were expected to play at least 14 events.) This was a better reflection of a player's actual abilities — and, yes, it changes the rankings significantly. Note the Kim Clijsters moves past Svetlana Kuznetsova to take the #4 ranking, Martina Hingis takes the #6 spot from Nadia Petrova, and Dinara Safina takes Patty Schnyder's Top Ten spot. Lindsay Davenport and Venus Williams all move up, too — but look at Marion Bartoli's fall!

1996 Ranking System Updated: The Declining Divisor

As a ranking system, the divisor had much to commend it. We know on theoretical grounds (which I won't bore you with) that it was a fairly good reflection of the ideal ranking system. Unfortunately, it doesn't really reflect current WTA reality. The fact that the WTA ranking system just adds points means that losses don't count. Players are rewarded for playing to, or even slightly past, their limits. And, because the number of high-tier events is fixed, they inevitably play more weak events as they add tournaments.

The solution: The declining divisor. We still take total points, but instead of dividing by total events (or by 14), we use a modified divisor. Since players are now expected to play at least 16 events, we divide by a minimum of 16 — but subtract a third of an event for each tournament above 16. So if player played 17 events, her total points are divided by $16\frac{2}{3}$. If she plays 18 events, her divisor is $17\frac{1}{3}$. And so forth.

Not too surprisingly, the results of this are intermediate between the current ranking system and the 1996 system. In the Top Ten, we still see Hingis overtake Petrova, and Safina boots Schnyder — but Clijsters does not overtake Kuznetsova. Nor do Davenport and Venus Williams gain as much, nor Bartoli fall as much.

The results of this ranking are on the next page.

2006 Rankings with Double Quality Points

Most of the rankings so far have looked at so far have, in some way or other, added back the quality points the WTA eliminated in 2006. But quality points were never more than about a third of a player's points, and that fraction shrank over the years as the WTA inflated round points. We will see below that quality points are the forward-looking part of the rankings — the best predictor of future results. So the next few rankings try to be more balanced by increasing the quality points. In this case, we'll take the actual WTA round points and add in double quality points. The results are about typical: Schnyder out of the Top Ten, Davenport and Li Na move up a lot, Grönefeld plummets.

1996-Style Divisor Rankings with Double Quality Points

As you can probably guess, this is calculated the same way as the “regular” 1996 rankings: total points plus quality points (doubled) divided by number of events or 14, whichever is larger. The results are not that much different from the other Divisor ranking: Clijsters overtakes Kuznetsova, Hingis overtakes Petrova, Schnyder out of the Top Ten, Davenport up to #11, Li Na Top Twenty, Venus Williams Top 25, Marion Bartoli just barely Top Thirty.

This would probably be just about the ideal points-and-divisor ranking if the WTA didn't use additive rankings, but as it is, it ignores the players who overplay. So, under current circumstances, we should perhaps use the following:

Declining Divisor with Double Quality Points

If you've read the preceding several introductions, you'll probably understand this: Total round points, double quality points, minimum divisor 16, with each event past #16 discounted by a third. The results of that are given below. Again we see our first change at #6, where Hingis overtakes Petrova; again Schnyder is out of the Top Ten, replaced by Safina. It is interesting to see how consistent the rankings are this year: We almost always get the same changes. That is not at all typical. \

Quality Points per Tournament

One last variation on the WTA Points-based ranking. Since we've said that quality points are the best predictors of future results, why not raw quality points per tournament? This is our "future potential ranking": It is among the best at forecasting which players are likely to make big moves in future.

Because this ranking is very different from most of the other rankings here, I have listed the entire Top Fifty under this ranking (at least, the Top Fifty among the players I checked, which includes all players with significant WTA-level results). Fascinatingly, the Top Five are unchanged under this ranking — something I would never have guessed. Though we note that Hénin-Hardenne's lead, which is quite small in the WTA rankings, is huge in this department. We also notice Lindsay Davenport all the way up at #6, Venus Williams at #11, Serena Williams at #13 — and Patty Schnyder, whom the WTA alleges to be a Top Ten player, at #20!

Virginia Ruano Pascual's high ranking doesn't mean much; she has a history as an upset artist. The evidence does seem to indicate that Paola Suárez still has the potential for a comeback, though, and Tsvetana Pironkova and (especially) Agnieszka Radwanska can still climb. Victoria Azarenka, who doesn't get nearly as much attention, also looks like a good prospect. But Lucie Safarova looks like she'll be falling, and Elena Vesnina probably isn't as good as her WTA ranking indicates.

How good is this ranking at predicting things? Pretty good. For 2002, e.g., it "predicted" Daniela Hantuchova,. For 2003 it forecast Maria Sharapova. Then, in 2004, it predicted that Sharapova would not improve as much in 2005; it also forecast falls for Anastasia Myskina, Svetlana Kuznetsova, and Ai Sugiyama. Plus it also forecast big moves by Sesil Karatancheva (who was last year's #127, but #35 in quality points per tournament — which just happened to be her 2005 year-end ranking before she was suspended!), Anna Chakvetadze, Nicole Pietrangeli, and Ana Ivanovic. Of these, only Pietrangeli was really obvious at the end of 2004 — except in the quality standings. For 2006, it forecast the return of Justine Hénin-Hardenne, the fall of Nathalie Déchy, and the continued progress of Michaela Krajicek. And, in March of this year, it said that Martina Hingis would end 2006 at #8. She was of course #7, but by a very small margin. It's not perfect — for 2003, it forecast Myriam Casanova as the Next Big Thing — but it's the best predictor of future success I have found to date.

On the evidence, if the Williams Sisters can come back, they will still be threats. So too for Davenport, except that she is retiring. And watch out for Pironkova and Radwanska.

Tournament Strength-Based Rankings

To this point, everything we've done has been based on WTA methods — not necessarily their current methods, but methods they've used at one time or another. Given their track record on rankings, there is no particular reason why we shouldn't break away from this.

One real defect in the WTA rankings (one of the aspects formerly covered up by quality points) is that the points the WTA awards for an event don't correspond very closely to the actual strength of an event. The Slams are always stronger than the Tier III events, and even the weakest Tier I is stronger than the strongest Tier IV, but a weak Tier I like the Pan Pacific is hardly comparable to a strong Tier I like Moscow or Zürich, and is in fact weaker than some strong Tier II events. (Though, interestingly, the four events that used to be the strongest Tier IIs have all changed: Filderstadt and Philadelphia are off the calendar, San Diego has moved up to Tier I status, and Sydney isn't as strong as it used to be.)

We can, of course, control for this if we have some measure of tournament strength. We find this measure in the Modified Tournament Strength Index, as discussed on page 37. On this basis, we can award points based on tournament strengths. The WTA awards full points for winning an event, 70% of that total for a final, 45% for a semifinal, etc. We can use those numbers, but plug in our tournament strength values. We then add up a player's total for all of her events. That gives us this list — with, amazingly, still the same Top Four as in the WTA rankings:

Idealized Won/Lost

And now, for something completely different. So different, in fact, that it will actually knock Hénin-Hardenne off the #1 spot, if only by a fraction of a percent.

In concept, this is simple: It's a ranking based on won/loss percent. In practice it's going to take a lot of explaining. Start with this: Theoretically, winning percentage ought to be a good measure of who is ranked highest. Except — a player who plays weak events may well produce a much higher winning percentage than a better player who plays stronger events. An obvious and infamous victim of this was Anna Kournikova. She played almost entirely Tier II and higher events, and never won any. As an obvious contrast, Henrieta Nagyova won nine career titles, mostly because she played a lot of Tier IV events. Kournikova was by far the better player (even at the very end of her career in 2003, when Kournikova was in her final spiral out of the game, she won her last meeting with Nagyova 6–1 6–2). But the Russian never put up the titles that would, on their face, prove it.

So a ranking system based on won/lost must somehow take tournament strength into account. And we need to track wins over top players. And we need to encourage players to play as much as possible, within reason.

We can do all of those things. To deal with the first, we simply diddle with the value of wins. Let's arbitrarily say that a win at a Tier I counts as one standard win. Then we will assign a value of 1.1 wins for a Slam win (this is our Slam Bias, since in fact the early rounds at Slams are generally easier than at Tier I events). A Tier I win is, of course 1.0 wins. A Tier II win is .95 wins. A Tier III win is .8 wins. A Tier IV win is .6 wins. And a Challenger win is .4 wins. (I repeat that numbers are arbitrary, and different values will get you different results, but they feel about right to me).

We will not count qualifying wins, though qualifying losses we will count.

To take wins over top players into account, we'll assign bonus wins: If you beat a Top Four player, it's worth an extra .6 wins. A player ranked #5 to #10 gets you .4 bonus wins. Beating #11-#20 gets you .2, and beating #21-#35 is worth .1.

To encourage players to play more, we do two things: First, we require you to play sixteen events, and add losses until you do (except for injured players). And second — and this is the key part — we reduce losses exponentially. Instead of calculating raw wins and losses, we take losses to the .8 power. What this means is that if two players have the same winning percentage, but one has played more, the one who has played more will have a slightly higher adjusted winning percentage. Not much — losses still count! But enough to make it worth playing more if it doesn't drag your results down. Note: Withdrawals and walkovers do not count as wins or losses.

The columns in the table on the next page are as follows: Rank: The player's ranking under this system. Player: The player's name. Events: How many tournaments she played. Wins: Actual WTA wins. Losses: Actual WTA losses. Top 4 Wins: How many wins she had over players ranked #1-#4. Top 10 Wins: Number of wins over players ranked #5-#10 (note that this is not actually the number of wins she has over Top Ten players; that is in fact the sum of "Top 4 wins" and "Top 10 Wins"). Top 20 Wins: Wins over players ranked #11-#20. Top 35 wins: Wins over players ranked #21-#35. Adjusted wins: The player's adjusted win count. If this is higher than her number of actual wins, as is true e.g. of Sharapova and Hénin-Hardenne, it means the player is playing a lot of high-tier events; if it is dramatically lower than her number of wins, as e.g. for Peer or Bartoli, it means she is playing far down the tier scale. Bonus Wins: The value, in wins, of the victories over the top players. Adj Losses: Losses calculated according to the formula above. Adj W %: Winning percent under this formula:

$$(\text{Adjusted wins} + \text{Bonus Wins}) / (\text{Adjusted wins} + \text{Bonus Wins} + \text{Adj. Losses})$$

WTA: The player's WTA ranking

As mentioned above, this is the first ranking under which Hénin-Hardenne is not #1, though she is a strong #2. The rest of the Top Five is unchanged; in the Top Ten, Hingis moves past Petrova to #6; Safina takes Schnyder's Top Ten place.

Incidentally, an advantage of divisor rankings is the they generally lessen the penalty for being hurt. In this ranking system, we could handle that by eliminating the “penalty losses” players suffer for being hurt. If we did that for Davenport, Pierce, and the Williams Sisters, we would find Davenport at #8, Serena at #10, Venus at #16, and Pierce probably somewhere around #35. That’s generally better injury protection than they get from the WTA, and it’s also entirely automatic. Don’t hold your breath waiting for it to happen, though — not with the WTA increasing fines for late withdrawals and otherwise penalizing injured players.

The “Majors Ranking”

It is an unfortunate fact that tennis uses the word “major” as a synonym for “Slam.” It’s unfortunate because it leaves us with no good word for “the best events.” The Slams are, of course, among the strongest events on the tour — but there are usually at least half a dozen other events which are competitive in terms of field strength. And many of them aren’t even Tier I events; the Tier II tournaments at Sydney and Filderstadt have traditionally been stronger than the average Tier I; the Tier I events at Moscow and Tokyo, by contrast, have a history of being too weak for the points they award. Quality points make up for some of that — or they did in the days when the WTA had the brains to award them — but not all.

Which gives us the basis for another ranking, the “Majors Ranking.” We take the ten best events (based partly on history and partly on their strength this year, as reflected in the section on tournaments), and count results only in those events. In 2006, our list is Sydney, Australian Open, Miami, Rome, Roland Garros, Wimbledon, San Diego, U. S. Open, Zürich, and the Los Angeles Championships. (The list does vary from year to year, as described below.) Since all these events are strong, we don’t need quality points for this ranking. And early losses are worthless. We’ll count only semifinals and better: 1 point for a semifinal, 3 for a final, 5 for a win.

Note that this gives a title more relative value than the WTA ranking table. The WTA awards Win/Final/Semifinal points in the ratio 20:14:9; this system awards 20:12:4, because winning is much more memorable than being a finalist, and hardly anyone remembers a player who doesn’t even make the semifinal.

By definition, no more than forty players can earn majors points in a year, and in practice fifteen is about normal — that being, in fact, the number we had this year. Also by definition, only 100 points are awarded in a year. It will be evident that the “Majors Ranking” is not useful as an overall ranking system — it isn’t intended to be — but it is a good measure of the accomplishments we might count toward Player of the Year. We observe with interest that we the Majors Ranking this year gives us the same Top Five as the WTA rankings; that is extremely unusual. Hénin-Hardenne’s 24 points is about typical for a #1 in this ranking, though in recent years the totals have been much lower.

To give some perspective on these numbers: Last year, when I counted Filderstadt instead of Zürich, we had a very high total of 21 players with Majors points, though the 15 points scored by leader Amélie Mauresmo was rather low. (That’s inevitable, with only 100 points to award: If a lot of players have points, then nobody can have many.) More surprising is the fact that, with such a low total for the leader, we have only four players with ten or more points: Mary Pierce had 14, Lindsay Davenport 12, Kim Clijsters 10.

In 2004, we had 17 players with Majors points, though with even lower totals for the leader: Lindsay Davenport and Mauresmo led with 13 points, Serena Williams had 12, and four others had 10 points.

2003 was more typical though much more top-heavy: 14 players, led by Kim Clijsters (32 points), Justine Hénin-Hardenne (22), Serena Williams (15), and no one else with more than 8.

In 2002, we had fifteen players: Serena Williams of course led with 29 points, then Venus Williams (16), Clijsters (13), Capriati (11), and all others below 10. In 2001, when Indian Wells replaced Rome, we had only thirteen Majors point-scorers, despite which the leaders had lower totals: Venus Williams (22), Capriati (15), Davenport (14), Hingis (14), Serena (13), and the rest lower. In 2000, we must add Philadelphia (substituting for Filderstadt, which in 2000 had its field depleted by the Olympics) and the Canadian Open for Indian Wells. We had sixteen players that year; The rankings were: Hingis (24), Davenport (22), Venus (15), and the rest below ten. In 1999, Filderstadt substitutes for the Canadian Open, and we again had sixteen players: Hingis (31), Davenport (23), Venus (11), Graf (10), and the rest below 10.

Since I started compiling this statistic, the highest score has been the 32 points by Clijsters in 2003 (yes, the year she didn’t win any Slams — but won everything else). Prior to that, the biggest score I can guarantee is Martina Hingis’s 43 points in 1997. No doubt players like Graf in 1988 and 1989 scored higher, but I don’t have the tournament strength data to determine which events belong on the Majors list.

The list of players with at least one Majors point in 2006 is as follows (I also show the Majors points earned at each event):

Major Rank	WTA Rank	Player	Major Points	Syd-ney	AO	Miam	Rome	RG	Wim	SD	USO	Zürich	Madr Cham

Top Doubles Players Analysed

All the Players in the Doubles Top Ten in 2006: The Complete Top Ten Based on WTA (Best 11) Statistics

The lists below show all players who have ranked in the Top 10 in 2006, with the highest rank achieved. A total of nineteen players spent time in the Top Ten in 2006 — a rather high number, but some of that is the result of the rankings change; Zvonareva, e.g., was Top Ten in 2005 but not under the 2006 system.

Black (1)	Peschke (8)	Stosur (1)
Grönefeld (7)	Raymond (1)	Stubbs (4)
Hantuchova (5)	Ruano Pascual (2)	Sugiyama (8)
Huber (5)	Schiavone (9)	Zheng (3)
Kuznetsova (7)	Shaughnessy (8)	Yan (4)
Likhovtseva (7)	Srebotnik (7)	Zvonareva (10)
Martinez (7)

The following list shows all the players who have occupied a given position in the Top 10:

1. Black, Raymond, Stosur
2. Raymond, Ruano Pascual, Stosur
3. Black, Raymond, Ruano Pascual, Stosur, Zheng
4. Raymond, Ruano Pascual, Stosur, Stubbs, Yan
5. Black, Hantuchova, Huber, Ruano Pascual, Stubbs
6. Black, Huber, Ruano Pascual, Stubbs, Zheng
7. Black, Grönefeld, Kuznetsova, Likhovtseva, Martinez, Ruano Pascual, Srebotnik, Yan, Zheng
8. Grönefeld, Hantuchova, Kuznetsova, Martinez, Peschke, Ruano Pascual, Shaughnessy, Srebotnik, Sugiyama
9. Hantuchova, Likhovtseva, Martinez, Peschke, Schiavone, Shaughnessy, Srebotnik, Sugiyama, Yan, Zheng
10. Grönefeld, Hantuchova, Likhovtseva, Martinez, Peschke, Ruano Pascual, Schiavone, Shaughnessy, Sugiyama, Yan, Zheng, Zvonareva

It's rather interesting to compare this with the doubles Top Ten at the end of, say, 1999. The Top Ten that year was 1. Kournikova, 2. Hingis, 3. Neiland, 4. Davenport, 5. Raymond, 6. Morariu, 7. Stubbs, 8. Likhovtseva, 9. Sanchez-Vicario, 10. Serena Williams, 10. Venus Williams. That list of 11 players includes the entire singles Top Four (Hingis, Davenport, Venus, Serena), and Kournikova, Likhovtseva, and Sanchez-Vicario were also Top Twenty players. The 2006 list has one player who is in the singles Top Ten (Kuznetsova), and she cut back on doubles this year and is now ranked far lower; at the end of the year, there was not one player in both the singles and doubles Top Ten. And we see increased numbers of doubles specialists — Huber and Stubbs don't play singles at all, and Black and Raymond are effectively done as singles players also; Ruano Pascual keeps playing, but she's making her living at doubles; so is Yan. Peschke all but vanished from singles this year. Likhovtseva's singles results also fell far more dramatically than her doubles results. There can be little doubt: Doubles and singles are becoming separate though related sports.

Doubles Tournament Strengths

Above, we calculated the strengths of the various WTA events based on two systems: Top Four Players (page 36) and Modified TSI (page 37). Modified TSI is not easy to apply to doubles events, but we can calculate Top Four Players — or, rather, Top Four Teams. We follow a rule similar to that we used for the singles: Take the combined rankings of the rankings of the team with the best combined ranking, and double it. Add double the ranking of the #2 team, then the ranking of the #3 and #4 teams.

In singles, the minimum score is 13. In doubles, this is more complicated, since there can be multiple players with the same ranking, and of course the #1 player can choose to play with #100. The minimum if we have teams of #1+#2, #3+#4, #5+#6, and #7+#8 is 44. In fact we had no tournament that strong this year — but some came very close; four events (Wimbledon, U. S. Open, Madrid, and — oddity of oddities — Zürich) had combined rankings less than fifty. On the other hand, we have a couple with combined rankings greater than 1000; these, obviously, were more like Challengers than Tour events (indeed, the gap between Tour events and Challengers is often less in doubles, because very good doubles players maybe forced into Challengers because their singles rankings are so low).

The table below lists the sixty WTA events with a doubles draw (recall that Forest Hills has no doubles draw), sorted in order based on how strong they are.

This table has one other twist: It also lists the tournament's standings in the singles Top Four rankings (with all the Challengers and such eliminated from the list, so that the singles events are also ranked from 1 to 60). We use this to let us compare whether the events were stronger in singles or doubles. I won't explain how I did this in details (if you care, the "magic ratios" were 0.6, 0.83, 1.2, 1.65), but it's interesting to note how dramatically different an event's strength could be in singles and doubles.

Doubles Results

What follows is similar to the tables for singles player results (page 41), with a handful of exceptions. For starters, obviously, the list shows which partner a player played each event with. Also, the list of teams beaten is a little different. Instead of listing rankings, it lists seed numbers, in curly brackets {}. In some cases, where a particularly significant team has gone unseeded, I've listed them anyway. So, for example, the second line in the entry for Shinobu Asagoe reads

Australian Open w/Srebotnik (Slam, SF [Yan {34}/Zheng {33}], 4) — Huber/Schiavone {8}, Black/Stubbs {2}

That means Asagoe played the Australian Open with Katarina Srebotnik. They made the semifinal before losing to #34 Yan Zi and #33 Zheng Jie, winning four matches to do so. Along the way, they beat #8 seeds Huber/Schiavone and #2 Black/Stubbs.

A note about withdrawals: Doubles withdrawals have become so common that events often don't have Lucky Losers available to fill draw slots when a team pulls out of the first round. For purposes of record-keeping, these withdrawals are listed in the player results below (see, e.g. Daniilidou at Birmingham). The WTA does not count either withdrawal as an event, so players with this sort of withdrawal will show more events than the WTA lists. When teams withdraw and another team replaces them, I have not listed these.

Doubles Upsets

The 50 Biggest Doubles Upsets of 2006

On page 66, we saw the 100 biggest singles upsets of 2006, based on the ratio of player rankings. The list below is equivalent for doubles. We take the combined ranking of the winning team (with unranked players being treated as “999”), and divide it by the ranking of the losing team. The higher that ratio, the higher the team stands on this list. Note that we only look at losing teams with a combined ranking of 100 or less.

It tells you something about the effect of combined rankings that the top five upsets were all against the world’s top team of Raymond/Stosur. This is hardly surprising; since they were the top pair for almost the whole year (with a combined ranking of #3 for the first half of the year, then #2 after Wimbledon), no other team could have a combined ranking higher than #7, making any other team much less of an “upset target.”

Doubles Team Winning Percentage

The list below shows the doubles teams with the best match winning percentage (minimum three events; team with five or fewer events in italics). The list also shows the number of events played and the number of events won. Note withdrawals do not count as losses. Qualifying wins and losses are included in the total.

The re-addition of quality points makes a surprising amount of difference, given that the way the doubles rankings worked never gave them much weight in the past — whereas quality points were about a third of points in the singles ranking, in doubles they were usually less than 20%. But we see three of the top five change hands this year. Of course, two of those are the swap by Yan Zi and Zheng Jie, and this is probably an artifact simply of the way I calculate quality points; Yan had more events this year, and that helped her a little. But the move by Srebotnik is real and interesting. Also noteworthy is the slide by Cara Black. That looks potentially ominous for her.

Doubles 1996 Ranking System: The Divisor

For background, see the discussion of the singles divisor ranking on page 118. Note particularly Srebotnik, Safina, Suárez, Navratilova, and Petrova. Interestingly, the only player falling out of the Top 25 in this system is Eleni Daniilidou.

Doubles 1996 Ranking System Updated: The Declining Divisor

For explanation of this system, see the singles Declining Divisor, page 119. This, we observe, gives us results much more like the WTA doubles rankings, though Safina still moves up quite a bit and Daniilidou is again out of the Top 25.

Doubles 2006 Rankings with Triple Quality Points

In concept, this is equivalent to the ““2006 Rankings with Double Quality Points” on page 121. But, for this purpose, I’ve tripled the quality points. This is because doubles awards proportionately fewer quality points (more on this later). Tripling the quality points is an attempt to offset this. Interestingly, the results are much like the results when we added quality points only once (above, page 165).

Doubles Quality Points per Tournament

Above, on page 124, I explained the advantage of quality points as a measure of a player's future potential. Unfortunately, quality points never meant as much in doubles. The reason was the way the WTA awarded them. They were awarded based on the combined team ranking. So even a team consisting of the world's #1 and #2 doubles players had a combined ranking of 3, and was worth only 66 quality points, whereas a win over the #1 singles player was worth 100. A team consisting of the #3 and #4 players in the world, even though it would probably be the #2 team, had a combined ranking of 7, and was worth 43 quality points, compared to 75 for the #2 singles player. This could easily have been rectified by a small change in the points table — but the WTA brass thinks accurate rankings beneath their dignity, so they instead concealed the problem by abolishing quality points.

It remains to be established if quality points per tournament are a good indicator of anything in doubles (in at least one case, we know it isn't: Déchy isn't as good as her Q/T ranking — or, indeed, as good as her WTA ranking. She had one good tournament. It just happened to be the U. S. Open, where her opponents collapsed in the final, and where, under the old rules, they give doubles quality points). But, since they might be indicative for non-Déchys, I've calculated the Q/T rankings for doubles, and we'll see what comes of it next year. (Note: The list is not complete below #50).

If this is a reliable indicator, it should probably be no real surprise that Nadia Petrova is #1, given that she was arguably the world's best doubles player in 2004; her WTA ranking this year was artificially low because she played only nine events (and those not on a balanced schedule). Srebotnik is something of a surprise at #2, but she and #4 Dinara Safina both benefited from the addition of quality points in the earlier ranking. It's interesting to see Martina Navratilova retire at #8 in this ranking — it doesn't really look as if she needed to retire. Neither, it appears, did #16 Shinobu Asagoe. And while Martina Hingis's one doubles event didn't prove much, there seems little doubt she could still be a top doubles player. On the other hand, the fact that Rennae Stubbs falls to #17, and Cara Black to #20, is rather scary for that pair. Anna-Lena Grönefeld also drops from #11 to #26, and Kveta Peschke and Francesca Schiavone look rather over-ranked.

Doubles Tournament Strength-Based Rankings

This is similar to the concept we used above for singles; see “Tournament Strength-Based Rankings” on page 125. In this case, I have used the tournament strength numbers from the section “Doubles Tournament Strengths” on page 143. The points for a doubles tournament are set by dividing 9600 by the doubles tournament strength (meaning that the maximum possible strength is about 200 points); I have set a floor of 20 points. Otherwise, all is as explained in the singles section.

Doubles “Majors Ranking” — Team

This is, obviously, the same as the singles “Majors Ranking” on page 131. I have, however, significantly changed the list of events involved — omitting even the Madrid Championships. This is not because it’s a weak event, but because it involves only three matches. You get to the semifinal without even playing! So, based in part on the list of strongest events, I decided to rate results base on the Australian Open, Indian Wells, Miami, Rome, Roland Garros, Wimbledon, San Diego, the U.S. Open, Moscow, and Zürich.

To give these numbers some sort of perspective, last year’s #1 Cara Black had 17 majors points, followed by Samantha Stosur with 16. But that was an unusually weak year. Even this year is a bit on the low end of things: In 2004, Black/Stubbs and Ruano Pascual/Suárez had 23 points; in 2003, Clijsters/Sugiyama had 23 points together. In 2002, Paola Suárez had 25 points (21 of them with Ruano Pascual). Lisa Raymond led the Tour in 2001, with 28 points. The best year in recent memory was Martina Hingis in 1998; her Grand Slam plus other results gave her 36 points. Martina Navratilova surely did better somewhere in the past, but we don’t have the tournament strengths to tell you just what her total would have been. Probably somewhere around 42-45.

A total of 21 teams earned majors points this year. Note, however, that only Raymond/Stosur earned points at as many as half of the Majors (they earned points at seven of the ten); Black/Stubbs managed to score at four events, and no other team had more than three Major results.

Doubles “Majors Ranking” — Individual

Same as above, but based on individuals rather than teams. All told, 34 players earned at least one Majors point. Raymond and Stosur, not too surprisingly, earned points at the most Majors events — seven. But third place, interesting, did not go to Black or Stubbs or Yan or Zheng, but to Srebotnik.

The highest-ranked doubles player not to earn any major points at all was Nadia Petrova — who suffered from limited opportunities due to her injuries.

Total Matches Played by Top Players

The table on the next page shows the number of matches played by every player in the Top Fifty, plus a couple of dozen players below that. It also shows their WTA rankings. We note with interest that the top three in the list all played a high fraction of their matches at the Challenger level; Svetlana Kuznetsova, tied for fourth in this list in total matches played, is the leader in matches at the WTA level (Marion Bartoli is tied with Kuznetsova in matches, but she did have a few below the Tour level). Her total is, in fact, quite impressive though not entirely without precedent. Last year, Patty Schnyder played fully 83 matches to lead the Tour; Nadia Petrova was second with 79. In 2004, Iveta Benesova led the tour with 84 matches, followed by Marta Marrero and Vera Zvonareva with 79. In 2003, the leaders were Kim Clijsters with an astonishing 98 matches, then Justine Hénin-Hardenne, with 83. The leader in 2002 was Jelena Dokic, with 79, followed by Anastasia Myskina, with 77. It will be noted that nearly every one of those players took a dive the year after her busy year (the only exceptions are Myskina in 2002 and Schnyder and Petrova last year — and even Petrova suffered a bad injury); one can only hope the streak will end this year.

It is interesting to ask if there is any correlation at all between ranking and number of matches played. Obviously there isn't much for the Tour as a whole, or Poutchkova would be #1. But let's look at the Top Thirty, since they, for the most part, were playing at the WTA level all year. If we graph their rankings against their matches played, we see this:

Ranking versus Matches

There is perhaps a slight correlation there — but it appears to be slight. If we take the correlation coefficient between ranking and matches for these players, it turns out to be $-.52$. (Correlation coefficients can range from 1, meaning perfect correlation, to 0, meaning no correlation, to -1 , indicating inverse correlation.) What that $-.52$ number means is that, generally, the higher your ranking, the more matches you have played — but the correlation isn't very high. (In standard physics-lab-type experiments, you routinely get correlation coefficients of at least $.95$.) Still, it's much closer correlation than last year — in 2005, there was a correlation of only $.13$. Which, for a data set this size, is no correlation at all.

Number of Events Played by the Top 100

This is a statistic the WTA has made needlessly difficult to compute, because the “events played” column in their rankings no longer refers to events played but to nominal events played — required events which they skip are still counted. The extreme example of this was Conchita Martinez: She played her last matches toward the end of 2005. But her ranking was high enough that she was supposed to play the Australian Open, Miami, and Roland Garros. So there she was, on the next-to-last ranking list of the year, with zero points and three events. She in fact had zero points and zero events.

I used to calculate this statistic for the Top 150. I finally decided to cut back to the Top 100. As it is, the November 12, 2006 WTA ranking list showed excess events for the following Top 100 players: Clijsters, Davenport, Granville, Pennetta, Petrova, Pierce, Safarova, Vaidisova, S. Williams, V. Williams. In addition, Martina Müller had a $25K event played in tour year 2005 but counted toward her tour year 2006 ranking. And it’s just possible that I missed one or two like that. There won’t be many. The statistics below are based on actual events played, not nominal.

In terms of actual events played, the Top 100 totalled 2308 events this year. That compares with 2226 in 2005, 2265 in 2004, and 2330 in 2003. It will be seen that the total fluctuates somewhat, but not much in recent years.

It is interesting to note that the maximum events played by a Top 100 player has gone up this year: Marion Bartoli, Martina Müller, and Julia Schruoff all had 33 events. Last year, the most for a Top 100 player was 30 (by Craybas, Foretz, and Sromova). In 2004, Benesova and Jidkova led the Top 100 with 32 events each. 2003 was the last time a Top 100 player had more than 33 events: Vakulenko last year had fully 34. But three players with 33 events appears to be without precedent.

Bartoli is also, of course, the busiest player in the Top Fifty, and in the Top Twenty. The busiest player in the Top Fifteen was Jelena Jankovic, with 28 events; the busiest player in the Top Ten was Schnyder, with 25 tournaments.

The median number of events this year is 24. The mode is 25 events (that is, more players played 25 events than any other number); no fewer than 15 players played a 25-tournament schedule. The second most popular number of events, amazingly, was 28, played by 13 different Top 100 players.

Fully 33 of the Top 100 played 26 events or more; 56 played 24 events or more. A mere 26 players had 20 events or fewer, but that 26 includes six of the Top Ten! Only 11 Top 100 players played 16 or fewer events — but that list is even more distinguished, including as it does Clijsters, Davenport, Hénin-Hardenne, Piece, Sharapova, and Venus and Serena Williams.

The table on the next page shows the list of Top 100 players with each number of events The number in parenthesis after the player’s name is her ranking. Top 25 players are shown in bold.

The above data can be graphed. The graph on the next page shows how popular each schedule is — that is, the number of players playing that number of events.

Tournaments per Year

It's also interesting to compare rankings against number of events played. Do these correlate? The graph below shows the comparison. If there is any correlation, it is not obvious. In fact, the correlation coefficient between rankings and events played is only .17. Playing a heavy schedule is not the way to get ahead.

Total Matches Played by the Top 30 Doubles Players

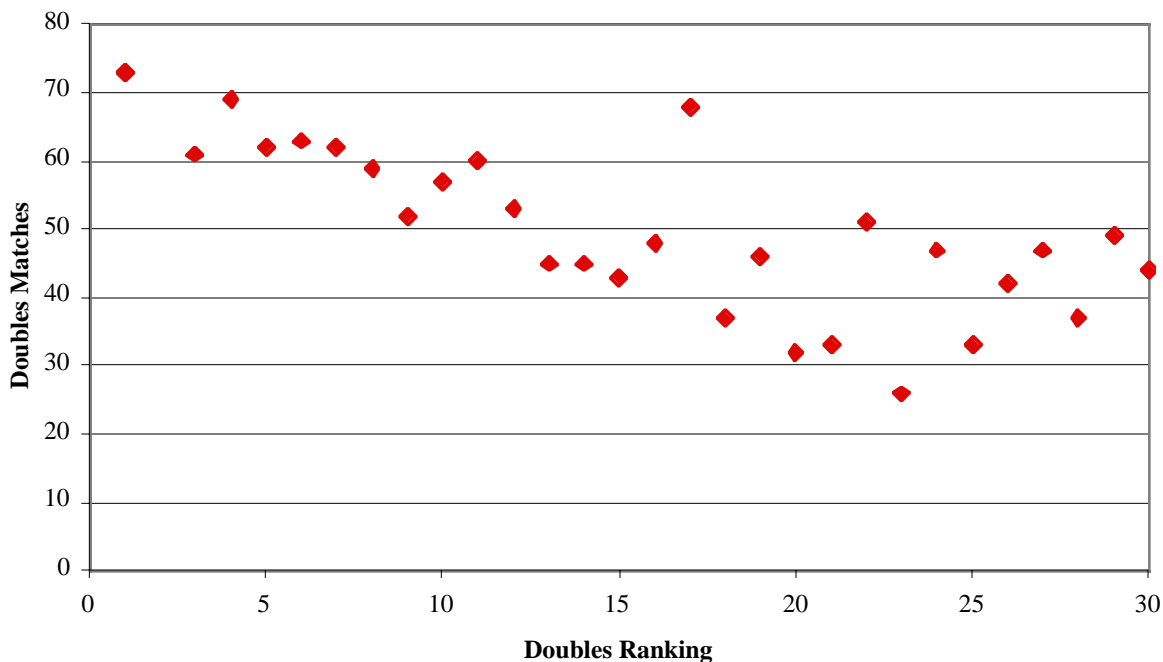

This is the doubles equivalent of the item “Total Matches Played by Top Players” on page 179, except that I only checked the Top Thirty. There are probably lower-ranked players with more doubles matches. The goal is simply to compare the matches played by the top players.

The graph is interesting: There does appear to be more of a correlation between matches played and ranking than we had in singles. And the correlation coefficient agrees: We have a coefficient of .76.

Doubles Ranking versus Matches

Number of Events Played By the Top 100 Doubles Players

This is the equivalent to the singles “Number of Events Played by the Top 100” on page 181. Interestingly, though the extremes are not too different in singles and doubles (the doubles player with the most matches had 33 events, the same as on the singles side), the doubles Top 100 had many fewer events: 1939, compared to 2308 events for the top singles players. A little of this may be smaller draw sizes; it may also be significant that doubles is Best 11 rather than Best 17. The median number of events is much lower: 19, compared to 24 on the singles side. The mode is 21 events, played by 11 players. It is a more balanced distribution than the singles Top 100. The table below shows the list of Top 100 players with each number of events. The number in parenthesis after the player’s name is her ranking. Top 25 players are shown in bold.

We can again graph this data:

Doubles Tournaments per Year

I'm not even going to bother graphing rankings versus events played. The correlation coefficient between the two, in doubles, is even less than in singles: a mere .06. With only a hundred data points, that's mere random noise. As in singles, playing more is not, by itself, the path to success.

Injuries

For years, I tried to keep track of injuries to top players, listing the type and the events they missed.

I've given up. There are too many.

We can hardly let a year pass without some investigation of injuries, though. We can at least list the rates of matches ending in withdrawals and retirements, or of last-minute bail-outs resulting in the introduction of a Lucky Loser into a main draw.

In singles, the numbers are as follows for 2006:

Withdrawals — 16

Retirements — 90

Lucky losers in WTA draws — 64

Total: 170

In 2005, I show 61 retirements, 14 withdrawals, and 74 Lucky Losers — a total of 149 instances of players not completing a match.

I didn't track retirements in 2004, so I can't compare before that. I do note that the number of withdrawals was higher in 2004; it appears that increased pressure on players is causing them to try harder to either start their matches or to withdraw before play began.

The numbers in doubles are also pretty impressive. Recall that the number of doubles matches is slightly less than half the number of singles matches — but in 2006 we had 24 retirements in doubles, 25 instances of Lucky Losers — and 46 withdrawals! That's 90 non-completions, meaning the rate of doubles matches not completed is even higher than the rate of singles matches that didn't go forward.

If we want to rate the top players on withdrawals, we get this table for the year-end Top Thirty (I've shown their doubles as well as their singles withdrawals/retirements):

Player	Singles Withdrawals	Doubles Retirements	Singles Total	Doubles Withd.	Doubles Retire.	Grand Total
Bartoli		1	1	1		2
Chakvetadze		3	3			3
Clijsters	1	2	3			3
Davenport		1	1			1
Dementieva	1		1	2		3
Golovin		2	2	2	1	5
Grönefeld			0	3		3
Hantuchova		2	2	1		3
Hénin-Hardenne		1	1			1
Hingis			0	1		1
Ivanovic		1	1			1
Jankovic	1	4	5	3		8
Kirilenko		1	1			1
Kuznetsova		1	1	2	1	4
Li Na	1	2	3	4		7
Mauresmo	1		1	2		3
Medina Garrigues		1	1		1	2
Peer			0			0
Pennetta		2	2	3		5
Petrova	1	1	2	1	1	4
Safina		1	1			1
Schiavone		2	2	4	3	9
Schnyder	1		1			1
Sharapova	1		1			1
Srebotnik		1	1			1
Sugiyama			0	1		1
Vaidisova	1		1			1
Zvonareva		1	1	3	1	5
Total:	9	30		33	8

Thus we note that, of the final singles Top Thirty, only six — Grönefeld, Hingis, Myskina, Peer, Stosur, and Sugiyama — finished every singles match they started, and Myskina took the end of the year off, while Grönefeld had three doubles withdrawals, and Hingis and Sugiyama also had doubles withdrawals; only Myskina, Peer, and Stosur completed every match they started in both disciplines. The most “incompletes” go to Schiavone, who tried to play through injury at the end of the year, with Jankovic second and Li Na third; they are the only players with more than five “incompletes.” We have a total of 39 singles “incompletes” for the Top Thirty, and they pulled out of 41 doubles matches. So that’s two and two thirds matches not completed by the average Top Thirty player, and that’s apart from any withdrawals before the tournament began!

WTA Tour History

Who Won What Summary — Singles

The following table shows all active Tier II or higher titles and lists which of the top players have won them. The figures in the boxes show how many times the player has won each event and the year of her earliest win (e.g. by the Australian Open, in the column for Capriati, we see 2/01 — Capriati has won the Australian Open two times, starting in 2001). Looking at this list can give a measure both of a player's success (Davenport, e.g., has a lot of titles) and her weaknesses (but Davenport has big holes in the clay season) The players listed are the Top Ten (except for Vaidisova, who has never won a Tier II), plus the major players of recent years.

Several of these players have also won Tier II events that are no longer played. The list: Clijsters — Hamburg (1/02), Leipzig (2/00), Filderstadt (2/02); Davenport — Atlanta (1/97), Chicago (1/97), Filderstadt (3/01), Princess Cup (1/99), Scottsdale (1/01); Dementieva — Shanghai (1/03); Hingis — Filderstadt (4/96), Hamburg (2/98); Martinez — Barcelona (1/91), Hamburg (1/95), Houston (1/93), Stratton Mountain (2/93), Tampa (1/89); Mauresmo — Nice (1/01); Pierce — Filderstadt (1/93), Princess Cup (1/95); Schnyder — Hannover (1/98); Seles — Bahia (1/01), Barcelona (1/92), Chicago (1/93), Essen (1/92), Houston (3/89), Milan (1/91), Princess Cup (5/91), San Antonio (1/90), Tampa (1/90); S. Williams — Hannover (1/00), Princess Cup (2/00), Scottsdale (1/02), Leipzig (1/02); V. Williams — Hamburg (2/99).

In addition, some of our players won some of these events before they reached Tier II status: Clijsters won Luxembourg 1999, 2001, 2002, 2003; Martinez won Paris 1990.

Who Won What Summary — Doubles

The equivalent of the preceding, but for doubles. It's harder to pick these players, as there are more doubles winners out there. I finally chose to list the Top Ten, meaning Black, Peschke, Raymond, Ruano Pascual, Schiavone, Srebotnik, Stosur, Stubbs, Yan, Zheng — plus Hingis and Serena Williams as the other active player with the Career Slam (Venus's record is the same as Serena's except that she didn't win Leipzig 2002), Likhovtseva, Suárez, and Sugiyama as the other top active players, plus Sanchez-Vicario as the other most successful players of recent years. The final lines of the table differ slightly from the singles table. The line "Events won" lists the distinct active Tier II titles each player has won. Serena, for instance, has won seven titles at these 30 events — but she has two Wimbledons and two Australian Opens, so she has only five distinct titles. The next line, "To 2000," lists each player's titles at all Tier II+ events in the years leading up to 2000 (inclusive). We then show her total for the 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, and the grand total.

Note that the total may be higher than the total titles listed, since some players will have titles at no-longer-extant tournaments (e.g. Hingis has 36 total doubles titles, but only 31 show up in the list; she also won Hamburg 1995, 2002, Filderstadt 1997, 2000, Leipzig 1997, Philadelphia 2000 which are no longer played).

We note that Lisa Raymond has the widest range of titles — though it's largely a matter of winning fast events with Stubbs and slow with Stosur. Serena Williams has the distinction of being the only player in recent times to win all four Slams in both singles and doubles; Navratilova of course did it to, and others before her, but that was pre-Rebound Ace.

Who Won What — History of Tournaments

The following tables list players who won the equivalent of Tier II and higher events. Some tournaments (e.g. Warsaw and Shanghai before 2003, Doha before 2004, Luxembourg before 2005) were not Tier II events for this entire period; these winners are shown in italics

4. Sometimes designated “Manhattan Beach”

5. The WTA lists Surabaya as a Tier II in 1996. The field does not back this up

Who Won What Part 4: 1986–1989

Order of events is (approximately) as in 1990. A major change in Tier schedule occurred between 1987 and 1988, with very many $150,000 events upgrading in the interim. In 1987, $150,000 was the equivalent of Tier II; in 1988, it was not. I have listed as Tier II events only those $150,000 events which upgraded in 1988 — but marked them in italics for 1987 (not previously). The Tour shifted to a Calendar Year system in 1986. Note that this resulted in many events not being played in 1986.

1. Partial year; see note on 1985–1986.
2. Until 1986, the Tour used a “tournament year” stretching from roughly March to March. In 1986, it switched to a calendar year form, explaining why many events are omitted (but not shown as unplayed) in 1986
3. The 1984/1985 season was 13 months long, including March 1985 and March 1986. One tournament — Dallas — was therefore played twice in that year, and not at all in the 1983/1984 season.
4. Reduced to a $50,000 tournament in 1985, coupled with a “4-woman special” won by Evert
5. Marco Island in 1986, with reduced prize money and an earlier date
6. The Italian Open was “in exile” 1980-1985, held in Taranto (with a $50,000 prize) in 1985, and in Perugia in 1984 and before (with a more normal $150,000 prize). It was not held in 1986 (not unusual given the realignment)
7. In some years (e.g. 1985), there were two Indianapolis events, perhaps on different surfaces. This is the larger
8. Held in Tokyo. Singles only; no doubles. Featured a third and fourth place playoff as well as winner and runner-up
9. Bonaventure in 1984; Deer Creek in 1983, with reduced prize money
10. Stuttgart until 1985
11. Held in Tokyo. Singles only; no doubles. Featured a third and fourth place playoff as well as winner and runner-up
12. Listed by the WTA as a Tier I event but with $50,000 in prize money. Presumably the former is correct
13. Key Biscayne: Later Boca Raton
14. Held in Livingston in the 1983/1984 season
15. Dallas 1984/1985: Won by Mandlikova in March 1984 and by Navratilova in March 1985

Recent Singles Winners, Finalists, Semifinalists

The following list shows every player to have reached a WTA semifinal, with listed result, since the beginning of 1999. Titles shown in Highlight. As a good general rule, the longer a player's entry, the better she is; the higher the fraction of her entry in Highlight, the better she handles pressure (not even close to the same thing).

Career Results for Leading Players

Career Results — Singles

The following tables summarize the performances of certain top singles players, both current and recently retired. The criterion used is that a player must have retired since 1996, and must have, or be projected to have, at least 20 career singles titles. The table then attempts (probably with some inaccuracy) to break out a player's titles by year, surface, and tier. Tiers have been translated, to the extent possible, to the current Slam-Champ-I-II-III-IV-V system, even though the system has changed dramatically over the years (e.g. events now titled Tier II might have had prizes of $225,000 or $350,000 in the early Nineties; similarly, in the late Eighties the money gap between Tier I and Tier II was only 3:2, compared to the 2:1 ratio of today. The list below does not represent the nomenclature at the time but what appears to me to be the best approximation to the nomenclature of today). Tournaments of Tier II or higher are shown in bold; lesser results in plain text. Slams are in bold coloured type. The year-end championships is also in bold colour as the closest thing to an indoor Slam.

Note: Here as elsewhere, events which do not follow WTA admission rules (Olympics prior to 2004, Fed Cup, Hopman Cup, Grand Slam Cup) are not listed. Since some WTA lists include the Olympics, their totals for Capriati, Davenport, Graf, Venus Williams, etc. may be one or more tournaments higher.

Career Results — Doubles

For inclusion in this list, players must have at least two Slams, and must have, or project to have, at least 25 doubles titles. Other criteria are similar to those for singles. For brevity, partners are listed only by initial in the following tables — e.g. the first item for Serena Williams is Oklahoma City (III/VW). This means Serena won Oklahoma City 1998, a Tier III, with VW=Venus Williams. The list of partners follows the list of results for each player. Players with whom the player won a Slam shown in bold. Note: Martina Navratilova is excluded because I just don't trust the early WTA data. The surface data for some of the older players may also be inaccurate.

Slam History

Singles Slam Winners

The following list shows, year by year, who won which Slams, and also shows the Open Era Slam Count for each player. (Note that some players, e.g. Court and King, have earlier Slams; these do not appear in the totals. Also, the Australian Open is always counted as the first Slam of the year even when it was actually the last, i.e. 1978-1985.) Multiple Slam winners shown in Bold

Singles and Doubles at the Same Slam (Open Era)

It's tough enough to win one part of a Slam. Winning singles and doubles is that much harder. The following list shows, year by year, the players who have won both. The first name in each column is, of course, the player who won both; the second name is her doubles partner.

Doubles Slams and Partners

The following tables show, for most of the major doubles players of the Open Era, the Slams they won and the partners with whom they won them. The emphasis has been placed on “career Slammers” — players who won all four Slams in their doubles careers. Grand Slams are shown in Bold

Grand Slams and Career Slams

A “Grand Slam” consists of winning all four Slams in a single year — a rare accomplishment indeed. A “Career Slam” consists of winning all four Slams at some time in one’s career, though not all in one year. The following lists summarize the Career Slams for Women in the Open Era.

Grand Slams, Singles, Open Era¹

Margaret Court, 1970

Steffi Graf, 1988²

Career Slams, Singles, Open Era³

Gigi Fernandez/Natasha Zvereva (14 Slams as a team)

Kathy Jordan/Anne Smith (4 Slams as a team)

Venus Williams/Serena Williams (6 Slams as a team)

1. Maureen Connolly also won a Grand Slam before the Open Era
 2. Steffi Graf is the only player, man or woman, to win the singles Grand Slam in the four-surfaces era
 3. Maureen Connolly, Doris Hart, and Shirley Fry had Career Slams before the Open Era. Billie Jean King won a Career Slam partly in the Open Era, but her only Australian Open title was pre-Open Era.
 4. Martina Navratilova has a non-calendar Grand Slam in 1983–1984: Wim 83, USO 83, AO 83, RG 84, Wim 84, USO 84
 5. Serena Williams had a non-calendar Grand Slam in 2002–2003: RG 02, Wi 02, USO 02, AO 03
 6. Maria Bueno also won a Grand Slam in doubles before the Open Era
 7. Navratilova and Shriver are the only team to win a Grand Slam together in the Open Era
 8. Hingis is the only player to win a multi-partner Grand Slam in the Open Era (Bueno did it before the Open Era)
Hingis also has the only doubles Grand Slam in the four-surface era.
 9. Margaret Court and Judy Tegart Dalton won a Career Slam as a team, but their only Roland Garros title was before the Open Era

1. Louise Brough, Maria Bueno, Shirley Fry, Doris Hart, and Lesley Turner Bowrey also had Career Slams before the Open Era. Judy Tegart Dalton won a career Slam partly in the Open Era, but her only Roland Garros title was before the Open Era

Total Slam Victories, Open Era

Note that many of these players (e.g. Court, King) also won Slams before the Open Era. These Slams are not counted (e.g. Court had 24 total singles Slams, but 13 were before the Open Era, so she is listed as having 11 Open Era Slam titles)

Players and Titles

Players with Titles, Year by Year

The following list shows, year by year, all the players with titles in a given year, and the number of titles for each player. (Note: Prior to 1993, the season was considered to start before the beginning of the calendar year, and prior to 1986, multiple years are listed, e.g. 1985/1986. The following lists are based on “Tour Years,” not calendar years, with 1985/1986 listed as “1985,” etc.)

1. Of Sharapova's five titles, three were below the Tier II level; the other two were above the Tier I level. Sharapova, through the end of 2004, had never won a Tier I or Tier II title — which is even stranger than all the footnotes below, though she changed that in 2005
2. Of Myskina's four titles, two were below the Tier II level — a rather unusual outcome for someone near the top of the titles list; most top players win most of their titles at large events — e.g. Clijsters won seven of her nine titles at Tier II or better events; Hénin-Hardenne won all eight of hers titles at Tier II or better events
3. As noted above, most players on this list, particularly in recent years, won the majority of their titles at Tier II or higher events. Smashnova 2002 is an exception; all four of her titles were small events.
4. Like Smashnova 2002, Schnyder had mostly small titles: four of her five were Tier III or lower.

Five Or More Titles in a Year

The following table shows all players who have earned five or more WTA Tour titles in a year (from the founding of the Tour in 1971), with the total years with five or more titles

Career Surface Sweeps/Singles

The list below shows all players active in 2002 or after to have won titles on all four surfaces, showing the strongest title on each surface and the year in which she achieved the sweep (i.e. earned her first title on her “last” surface) If a title is marked “etc.” (e.g. Seles is marked “Roland Garros 1990, etc.”), this means that she won it several times starting with that year.) The “best” tournament is based on tournament tier. Slam titles are abbreviated.

Career Grand Surface Sweep

The Grand Surface Sweep is a higher-order version of the Surface Sweep: It entails a title, Tier I or higher, on all seven major WTA surfaces: Rebound Ace, DecoTurf, Red Clay, Green Clay, Grass, Carpet (including Greenset and Supreme) and Indoor Hardcourts.

The WTA established the Tier I event in 1990 (though there were approximate equivalents for about a decade before that). In that period, the events of each type, by surface, were as follows:

Rebound Ace: Australian Open

DecoTurf: U. S. Open, Miami, Canadian Open, Boca Raton 1991–1992, Indian Wells 1997-present, San Diego 2004-present

Red Clay: Roland Garros, Rome, Berlin

Green Clay: Hilton Head/Charleston

Grass: Wimbledon

Carpet: WTA Championships 1990-2000, Chicago 1990, Pan Pacific 1993-present, Philadelphia 1993-1995, Moscow 1997-present

Indoor Hard: WTA Championships 2001-present, Zürich 1993-present

From this data, we can compile the (very short) list of Grand Surface Sweepers (this is all-time, since the Australian Open shifted to Rebound Ace; note that the list includes some events from the Slams and “Super Series” before 1990, though those “excess events” include only events which are still active):

1. Steffi Graf

Rebound Ace: Australian Open [1988], [1989], 1990, 1994

DecoTurf: U. S. Open [1988], [1989], 1993, 1995, 1996; Miami [1987], [1988], 1994, 1995, 1996; Canadian Open 1990, 1993; Boca Raton 1992

Red Clay: Roland Garros [1987], [1988], 1993, 1995, 1996, 1999; Rome, Berlin [1988], [1989], 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1996

Green Clay: Hilton Head [1986], [1987], [1989], 1993; [Amelia Island 1986, 1987]

Grass: Wimbledon [1988], [1989], 1991, 1992, 1993, 1995, 1996

Carpet: WTA Championships [1987], [1989], 1993, 1995, 1996; Pan Pacific [1986], 1994; Philadelphia 1995; Moscow 1997-present

Indoor Hard: [Washington 1989]

2. Martina Hingis

Rebound Ace: Australian Open 1997, 1998, 1999

DecoTurf: U. S. Open 1997; Miami 1997, 2000; Canadian Open 1999, 2000; Indian Wells 1998

Red Clay: Rome 1998, Berlin 1999

Green Clay: Hilton Head 1997, 1999

Grass: Wimbledon 1997

Carpet: WTA Championships 1998, 2000; Pan Pacific 1997, 1999, 2000, 2002; Moscow 2000

Indoor Hard: Zürich 2000

Lacking Rebound Ace and, apparently, Indoor Hard was Martina Navratilova. (This is largely lack of opportunity.)

Of the top active players, Serena Williams lacks green clay and carpet; Venus Williams lacks Rebound Ace and carpet; Lindsay Davenport lacks green and red clay; Monica Seles lacks grass and indoor hardcourt, Justine Hénin-Hardenne lacks grass and carpet; Kim Clijsters lacks Rebound Ace, green clay, grass, and carpet; Anastasia Myskina lacks Rebound Ace, DecoTurf, green clay, grass, and indoor hardcourt; and Amélie Mauresmo lacks Rebound Ace, green clay, grass, indoor hardcourt, and carpet.

Note that Graf was the only player ever to complete the calendar year Grand Surface Sweep (1989).

Strongest Career Rankings Showings

Based on the above statistics, we can produce a career “ranking of rankings.” In the system below, one point is awarded for a year in which a player ends at #8. Two are awarded for #7, 3 for #6, 4 for #5, 6 for #4, 8 for #3, 12 for #2, and 16 for #1.

It is interesting to note that 2006 made relatively little difference in the rankings — the top eight are unchanged. The only change in the Top Ten is that Justine Henin-Hardenne joins the list, at #9; she was #20 last year. Kim Clijsters rose from #18 to #12; Amelie Mauresmo broke into the Top Twenty, displacing Jennifer Capriati. Joining the Top Thirty is Svetlana Kuznetsova. The only new player added to the list is Nadia Petrova. Falling out of the Top Ten is Venus Williams (from #10 to #11).

Note: for purposes of reckoning, Monica Seles is omitted from the rankings for 1995, but is treated as #2 for 1996, with all players below her demoted one position.

The data above can be graphed, showing how the number of titles won by the winningest player has tended to decline over the years, especially on the singles side (it appears the general decline in doubles, and emergence of a number of female doubles specialists, has allowed the doubles number to stay relatively high: There are only a few player left who know how to in in doubles). The graph below shows the number of titles won by both the winningest singles player and the winningest doubles player since 1983.

Titles, Year by Year

Titles With Multiple Partners, Single Year, Open Era

According to the WTA, only 7 players have won doubles titles with five or more partners in a year in the WTA Era.* The following lists these players, their partners, and the number of titles with each partner.*

of Partners	Player	Year	Partners & Title Count
6	Helena Sukova	1993	Sanchez-Vicario (3), G. Fernandez (1), M. J. Fernandez (1), Navratilova (1), Stubbs (1), Smylie (1)
6	A. Sanchez-Vicario	1994	Novotna (5), Neiland (2), Davenport (1), Halard (1), McGrath (1), McNeil (1),
5	Pam Shriver	1989	Navratilova (4), K. Adams (1), Graf (1), Mandlikova (1), Nagelson (1)
5	Mercedes Paz	1989	Bollegraf (1), Goles (1), Scheuer-Larsen (1), Tarabini (1), Wiesner (1)
5	Larisa Neiland	1994	Bollegraf (1), Garrison-Jackson (1), McGrath (1), Sanchez-Vicario (1), Stubbs (1)
5	A. Sanchez-Vicario	1996	Novotna (4), Rubin (2), Neiland (1), Schultz-McCarthy (1), Spirlea (1)
5	Martina Hingis	1997	Sanchez-Vicario (3), Novotna (2), Davenport (1), M. J. Fernandez (1), Zvereva (1)
5	Natasha Zvereva	1997	Davenport (2), G. Fernandez (2), Sanchez-Vicario (2), Hingis (1), Sukova (1)

* The WTA list for this statistic is extremely inaccurate — it omits Neiland, gets Sanchez-Vicario's record wrong, and shows Paz with only four titles in 1989; I discovered her result with Tarabini by accident. This is a corrected list, but may be incomplete.

Slams With the Most Partners, Open Era

The following list shows all women who have won Slams with four or more partners in the Open Era, listing the partners and the number of Slams with each*.

Total Partners	Player	Partners & Slams
9	Martina Navratilova	Shriver (20), King (3), Evert (2), A. Smith (1), G. Fernandez (1) Mandlikova (1), Nagelson (1), Stove (1), Temesvari (1)
6	Martina Hingis	Novotna (3), Kournikova (2), Lucic (1), Pierce (1), Sukova (1), Zvereva (1)
5	Jana Novotna	Sukova (4), Hingis (3), Sanchez-Vicario (3), Davenport (1), G. Fernandez (1)
4	Natasha Zvereva	G. Fernandez (14), Savchenko Neiland (2), Hingis (1), Shriver (1)
4	Gigi Fernandez	Zvereva (14), Navratilova (1), Novotna (1), White (1)
4	Margaret Court	Tegart Dalton (4), Wade (4), Bueno (1), Goolagong (1)
4	Helena Sukova	Novotna (4), Kohde-Kilsch (2), Sanchez-Vicario (2), Hingis (1)
4	Francoise Durr	Chanfreau (2), A. Jones (2), Hard (1), Stove (1)
4	Betty Stove	King (2), Turnbull (2), Durr (1), Navratilova (1)
4	H. Gourlay Cawley	Balestrat (1), Goolagong (1), Harris (1), Russell (1)

* Note: Billie Jean King won titles with 5 players, but only three in the Open Era: Casals (5), Navratilova (4), Stove (1). Counting wins before the Open Era, Court won with 7 players: The above plus Ebbenn, Reitano, and Turner.
